

During his Coronation, Prince Charles the Third shocked the entire Christian world when he placed his hand on the Bible, kissed it, and made the following pledge to God:

God of compassion and mercy, whose Son was sent not to be served but to serve, give grace that I may find in thy service perfect freedom, and in that freedom knowledge of thy truth.

Grant that I may be a blessing to all thy children of every faith and belief, that together we may discover the ways of gentleness and be led into the paths of peace through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I find it surprising that this actually came as a surprise! The Royal Family for decades has been openly working to destroy Christianity.

Prince Charles announced back in 1996 that in the event of his accession to the British Throne, he would envisage himself as a defender of faith rather than a defender of the faith.

He is reported to have said, "I think we need to recover the depth, the subtlety, the generosity of imagination, the respect for wisdom, that so marked Islam in its great ages."

Jumping forward to recent times, in his opening remarks at the recent United Nations Cop 28 Climate Change Conference in Dubai, Charles made a clear declaration of His faith again in these words:

The dangers are no longer distant risks. I have seen across the commonwealth and beyond countless communities which are unable to withstand repeated shocks whose lives and livelihoods are laid waste by climate change. Surely real action is required to stem the growing toll of its most vulnerable victims.

We are carrying out a vast, frightening experiment of changing every ecological condition, all at once, at a pace that far outstrips nature's ability to cope. We need to remember too, that the indigenous worldview teaches us that we are all connected.

Not only as human beings, but with all living things, and all that sustains life. As part of this grand and sacred system, harmony with nature must be maintained. The Earth does not belong to us, we belong to the Earth.
