

Ashkenazi Jews have a very significant history with Europe, especially Italy. As some ancient documents reveal, their ancestors first arrived from Judea during the Roman Period, and especially following the Fall of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. The last chapter of the Book of Acts provides further evidence of Jewish communities settled in Italy in the first century.

The name "Ashkenazi" is actually derived from the Hebrew word for Germany, where many eventually moved in large numbers over the centuries, including into the region of France and further East.

However, during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, expulsions in these two neighbouring countries caused many Jews to return, settling mainly in Northern and Central Italy.

These new arrivals had a strong influence on Italian culture, which involved the establishment of Talmudic schools, and the introduction of Hebrew printing.

Alongside the Ashkenazi Jews, Europe has long been home to other Jewish groups, such as Sephardic, secular, rationalistic, ultra-Orthodox, mystic, and so forth.

It is still widely disputed today whether victims of the Holocaust belonged to all these backgrounds, or whether just one particular group was targeted.

Interestingly, the late Jeffrey Epstein came from an Ashkenazi family. He grew up in the Jewish community of Sea Gate, Brooklyn, just across the street from the Kneses Israel Synagogue, today affiliated with the Chabad-Lubavitch Movement.

In addition, recently released documents from the American Department of Justice showed that the Israeli government was involved in the installation of security devices at a Manhattan apartment linked to Epstein. Other documents revealed he instructed his pilot to buy hidden cameras to secretly record rooms in his Palm Beach residence.

These reports of Israeli managed surveillance systems have fuelled widespread theories that the man was an intelligence agent, using blackmail to entrap rich and influential people. Adding to the suspicion are the testimonies of the young women previously employed in his illegal sex industry, who suspected they were being filmed.

To conclude, as with the majority of political parties and their representatives, mainstream media exists to look democratic and show the world free speech exists.

Very few working within these environments don't know perfectly well they are managed and influenced by the same authority they seek to take down. However, to those claiming to be Christian, Luke sends out a clear warning: "When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on earth?"
